Anselment: Make the world a better place

770 graduates encouraged to take on big challenges

By MATT ADRIAN
Campus editor

The graduating class of 1996 was urged to use their education to change their communities and their world during the Dec. 7 graduation commencement ceremony.

Student Body President Jason Anselment said many students see commencement as an end to years of studying and discipline. He said commencement is not the end but a beginning of new, bigger challenges.

"Unfortunately, most experts tell us that our post graduate years will be much more difficult than these have been." Anselment said. "In short, we will inherit somewhat of a world in decline."

Anselment said the 770 students who graduated this semester are up to the task of making the world a better place.

"I have a vision of individuals, just like you, working together in communities, just like ours, attempting to seize the opportunity of making our state, our country, and our world a better place for our children and our grandchildren.

"Make no mistake, today marks an end to very little, for the demands tomorrow will place on us will be no less than those we experience now." Anselment said. "Today will not end the close friendships you have developed nor will it mark the end to your success or failure. Rather, like the day you first stepped foot on campus, today marks a beginning of a new life with new challenges."

Eastern President David Jorns challenged the graduating class to use their education to cut through ignorance and intolerance. He used a Chinese curse "May your live in interesting times," to illustrate his point.

He said it was a curse because people like times of peace and comfort, and an "interesting times" meant times of upheaval and strife.

"We pursue predictability ad infinitum ad nauseum," he said. "We prefer a rut."

Jorns said wanting a life of predictability, peace and comfort leads to intolerance, bigotry

Homecoming events to be evaluated

Student Life Office and the University
Board to study
Homecoming events

By DEANA POOLE
Staff writer

Student concerns about Homecoming Week have prompted the Student Life Office and the University Board to re-evaluate the events.

The groups hosted a Recognized Student Organization Homecoming evaluation meeting Friday to hear students' thoughts on Homecoming Week.

"There has never been a formal RSO Homecoming evaluation meeting. We wanted to let the campus voice their opinions," said Ryan Willerton, graduate assistant of the Student Life Office and facilitator of the meeting.

Willerton also said students had expressed concerns about Homecoming, and the meeting was a way for the campus to express its views.

UB Chair Tom Ryan said he thought the meeting went well, despite only three students coming to the meeting.

"I think it went really well. I wish more organizations would have showed up," Ryan said. "If the campus and community think there is a problem, that's the way to voice them - Homecoming won't change unless we hear their ideas."

During the meeting, participants agreed that Homecoming has become overly competitive, resulting in a lack of unity on campus. Participants pointed out that at the Homecoming football game, most of the members of organizations left after the overall winners of Homecoming were announced.

Other students at the meeting said there was too much noise at coronation because various groups were competing for spirit points by chanting instead of listening to the candidates' achievements. They suggested giving spirit points out at coronation for attendance only so members of organizations would show support for the candidates rather than cheer for their groups.

They also suggested making the same changes for the football game. In addition, participants suggested announcing the overall Homecoming winners at the end of the football game instead of during the game so students would stay for the entire game.

Participants also suggested changes for the fun games event. Suggestions included shortening the event to one day and having each organization plan a game for children in the community.

Ryan said he thought the suggestion of having the fun games for children in the community was a good idea.

"It brings the outside of Eastern's campus to our campus - it makes part of Homecoming a service project," he said.

Other suggestions included enforcing Homecoming rules more strictly and changing the divisions of Homecoming.

Currently Homecoming is divided into two divisions: greek and non-greek. Suggested changes included making divisions based on the number of participants, such as having an under 140 participants division and over 140 participants division.

The suggestions that were made during the meeting will be presented to the Student Life Office. A Homecoming committee will then be formed in February, and it will have the power to make any changes to next year's Homecoming.

Willerton said the meeting was a success. "(It went) really well - it's something I'll have to talk about with the (Student Life Office) staff," he said.

Willerton said there will be another meeting next semester to get more input.

Ryan said he thinks Homecoming should be evaluated every year.

The UB also placed a Homecoming evaluation survey in The Daily Eastern News to receive feedback from students on improvements to Homecoming.

Ryan said the intent of the surveys was for students to bring their ideas to the meeting.

"This was basically to start getting (students) thinking about Homecoming," Ryan said.

Willerton said he has not received many completed surveys but said he is expecting to receive more later in the week.

and prejudice, because people will be scared of the things they do not understand.

Jorns urged the graduates to use their education to pierce through the intolerance caused by ignorance. He concluded that the curse was not in fact a curse but a blessing and wished that all the graduates "may live in interesting times."

The students expressed a sense of relief to be graduating and discussed what they planned to do with their futures.

"It's great - very emotional," said Adina Sears, a political science major. Sears said she plans to go to Roosevelt University to go to paralegal school.

"It's about time," said Thomas Skinner, a music education major. He said he has been teaching part time and hopes to be teaching full time in January.

Correction

A story in Friday's edition of the Daily Eastern News incorrectly named the Koran as the religious text for the Jewish faith. It should be the Old Testament.

In other story, Music Professor Doug DiBianco's position on a strip bar ordinance was misrepresented. He didn't say he opposed the ordinance, but said he had reservations about it. He was also misquoted three times in the story.

The News regrets the error.

Dosmoche - Tibetan Celebration of the Dying Year

Lasting five days, this festival centers around a magical pole covered with stars, crosses, and pentagrams made of string. Dancers dress up in hideous masks to frighten away the evil spirits for the coming year. Feasting and prayers fill days and the finale is when the pole is torn down by the townsfolk.

La Befana - Italy's Santa Clause

La Befana, a kindly witch, rides a broomstick down the chimney to deliver toys into the stockings of Italian children. The legends say that Befana was sweeping her floors when the three Wise Men stopped and asked her to come to see the Baby Jesus. "No" she said, "I'm too busy." Later, she changed her mind but it was too late. So, to this day, she goes out on Christmas Eve searching for the Holy Child, leaving gifts for the "holy child" in each household.

Butter Sculpture Festival - Buddhist New Year

To celebrate the New Year in Tibet, Buddhist monks create elaborate yak-butter sculptures depicting a different story or fable each year. The sculptures reach 30 feet high and are lit with special butter lamps. Awards are given for the best butter sculptures.

Chaomos - Pakistan Winter Solstice

The ancient traditions of Pakistan pre-date the Christian era. During winter solstice, an ancient demigod returns to collect prayers and deliver them to Dezao, the supreme being. During this celebrations women and girls are purified by taking ritual baths. The men pour water over their heads while they hold up bread. Then the men and boys are purified with water and must not sit on chairs until evening when goat's blood sprinkled on their faces. Following this purification, a great festival begins, with singing, dancing, bonfires, and feasting on goat tripe and other delicacies.

Ganna - Ethiopian Christmas

Legend has it that the shepherds rejoiced when they learned of the birth of Christ and they waved their hooked staffs about and played Ganna. This is the origin of the game called Ganna that is traditionally played on Christmas Day (January 7 - the older date of Christmas) by all the men and boys in Ethiopia.

Ta Chiu - Taoist Festival of Peace

Ta Chiu is a Taoist festival of peace and renewal that takes place on December 27 in Hong Kong. The participants summon all of their gods and ghosts so that the gods' collective power will renew their lives. Images of patron saints from all the temples are gathered into one place, and people come to make offerings.

Feast of the Ass - Middle Ages Christian

At one time this was a solemn celebration reenacting the flight of the holy family into Egypt and ending with Mass in the church. The festival became very popular as it transformed into a humorous parody in which the ass was led into the church and treated as an honored guest while the priest and the congregation all brayed like asses. The Church suppressed it in the fifteenth century, although it remained popular and did not die out until years later.
